How do computers do what they do? How do networks work? What are social networks? How are computers changing society across the globe? How do laws and cultures affect the technology we use? This course provides students a computer hardware and software framework for understanding how technology is involved with global issues such as commerce, security, communication and education. This course also looks at ways global and cultural issues influence technology with topics such as: usability, legal issues,

	There is an on-line homework system that is required for this course. If you buy the textbook in the FLC bookstore you will automatically receive an access code for this system. If you buy the book elsewhere you might not receive the code and will have to buy one separately for $35. Access codes that have been used by one student cannot be reused by other students. If you took this course in the Fall 2009 term and are retaking it, your code will still work for one year but will not work next Fall. However, if you took TRS 82 last term, your code for that course will not work for TRS 92. Please contact the course instructor for more information.
